

Dear FCC:

I'm a flight attendant and I strongly urge you not to allow passengers to use cell phones on the plane. With the skies already crowded as it is, the number ONE cause of conflicts between passengers is not the alcohol consumption. It is the proverbial "elbow room." More than anything else, I have had to settle arguments and prevent fights because one person has reclined their seat to "intrude upon" the space of the person behind them (I'm not kidding!). It's bad enough that people are losing their physical elbow room onboard. If passengers are allowed to talk on cell phones onboard, that would also take away people's "mental elbow room." Can you picture someone trying to sleep only to have to put up the person next to them yakkety yak yakking away on their cell phone?

Again, I urge you not to allow cell phones on the planes! I'm already playing referee enough as it is!

Sincerely,

Nghiep "Nick" Dao
